

Every Child Deserves Two Good Parents

Coparenting Principle 2

Not every child has the chance to know and love both biological parents.

We support and admire any parent who is having to raise a child alone, and the other people, i.e. stepparents, grandparents, adoptive parents, who fill a parenting void in a child's life.

A "good parent" is not perfect, but does their best to act in their child's best interest

There are many disadvantages faced by children raised in a one parent household.

Divorce
affects children in many ways...

...including reduced
financial stability and weakened
parent-child bonds.

The demands on a single parent's time, patience and emotions are so high.

Single parents may at times provide their children with less emotional support, less supervision, and inconsistent discipline.

Introducing a stepparent...

...brings with it an increased likelihood of repeated family conflict and relocation.

If you support your child's relationship with their other parent, and coparent effectively to reduce conflict, you bring your child more peace allows them to relax and actually be a child.

Create opportunities for both parents to positively contribute to your child's life.
